

Orgies in the Air!

From the book:

Six-Legged Sex

Orgy Landmarks

Ever wonder what in the world swarms of flies are doing, or at least why they're doing so?

Well guess what?

It's an orgy. A fly orgy.

These swarms are usually found near bodies of water. Midges and mosquitoes are a great example of these swarms.

Swarms of insects use landmarks for orientation. They could choose spots like around a bush, tree, fence post, above in the sky, and even around you -- a human being. Shooting them away, you could, but the party will always regroup.

Next time you have flies swarming near you, no need to feel disgusted. Instead, feel like it's an honor to have you as their landmark for sexual orientation.

Reference

Wangberg, J. (2001) Six legged sex. Golden, CO: Fulcrum Publishing.